Today's Fight.

The bull dog and lynx fight is to come off today at the race track at 2 p. m. The dog has already had a look at the cat and is just wild to go at him. He struggled so fiercely at the mouth of the cage that it took two men to choke him off. The deep growling of the lynx drove the dog into a frenzy and it was found necessary to take him away.

The rules under which they are to fight will be known as the Marquis of Furlong rules. A long iron bar with a ring in the top will be driven in the ground and a rope (with the cat on one end) will be drawn to insure safety, through it. The bull dog will then be allowed to commence his mastication exhibition on the cat, which will have considerable rope length to work with.

If the dog breaks the cat's back it is all up with him, but if the animal from the mountains lays down on his back and gets in a little claw work on the bulldog there will be a terrific fight. Bets are being offered on the dog that he will kill his antagonist in less than a minute, but his hide will bear the marks to his grave. Adam Dixon handles the cat.

The claws of the cat are not to be pulled and it will be to the death for one or the other.

The managers anticipate some trouble with the authorities but they argue that a State which licenses the prize fight should not hold up its hands in a struggle where the brute creation supplies the principles.

Furthermore they refer to the coursing of coyotes at the State and District Fairs a few years ago and also to the crowd of spectators who witnessed the affair. They are positive that the law is weak and say that the matter of making flesh of one and fowl of the other is too unequal to stand. Humans have battered each other in Nevada from time to time and the laws permit it. If such affairs are allowed to operate in this State they propose to make a test case of animal fighting.

Flowers and Seeds.

The lover of flowers can derive much pleasure in looking over the beautiful catalogues sent out by all the leading florists, and anticipating the interest of watching the growth and perfection of the many novelties they introduce. Of the dozen received by the writer this year there is none better or more attractive than the old stand-by "Vick's Floral Guide." The story circulated that this firm had suspended business is utterly untrue. They offer just as great inducements this year as ever and will do just as well by both old and new customers. From personal experience this guarantee is given. If you have not received their catalogue send for one and you will have no difficulty in making out an order. The trouble will be to know when to stop making it out. Their prices are as low as any and lower than most houses.

So much has been said detrimental to the work of the Salvation Army that it is good to record something creditable. During the past twelve months the Salvation Army food depots in London have supplied about 2,290,950 cheap meals to the homeless and starving. Of these 210,000 were free. If any other christian organization can make a better showing in the practice of true christian charity, the record has not been made public.
